The occurrence of bone marrow involvement in systemic sclerosis has been reported by several authors, and while there are no exact figures the exact percentage cannot be ascertained. Among the factors which could explain the differences in the results of the studies on the frequency of bone marrow involvement by systemic sclerosis are the methodology used, the activity of the disease, the number of patients studied and the age of the patients. In the cases described the bone marrow was found to be hypocellular with the presence of large number of reticulin fibers. Since we have detected the presence of the same signs in the periapical radiographs of sclerotic mandibles, the use of these same radiological markers in the evaluation of bone marrow involvement by systemic sclerosis could be justified.Tag Archives: entertainment Once again I give the scene report on Act Like A Dog, American Style.
